

I would like to say I'm surprised to see that Sinclair Broadcasting has the slightest chance of getting "Stolen Honor" aired so close to an election. But, at this point, I've lost all faith that the FCC can do anything remotely in the public's interest when in the hands of a political puppet like Michael Powell.

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
